Street nomenclature is an important matter and Washington has been favored by frequent discussions in regard to how the city thoroughfares should be called. The appointment of a commission to rename the alleys and designate names for the new streets and alleys, hills and streams of the District need not reopen the general question, as the powers of the commission do not appear to extend so far. Their function is simpler. It is to substitute a clean and dignified nomenclature in the limited field to which their labors apply for an unclean and an undignified or a confused one. The stranger who looks over the directory and finds s congeries of ugly and offensive names wonders if those who made these names or sancfloned them after they were bestowed had no better taste or greater facility of invention than the names themselves imply that they had. While the world is full of names signifying purity, sweetness, excellence, elevation, happiness, comfort and a hundred other refined and nseful qualities or things the back ways of the national capital are so called as to imply the very reverse. If in some respects the present condition of the alleys justifies the names they bear then so much the more necessary is it to improve the nomenclature in order that subsequently the improvement may be extended from the necessity of the thing to the condition of the thoroughfare. An appropriate name is indispensable, but as an inappropriate condition is not, name and condition must be made to conform to the high standard a great capital city should set in all such matters. Having so long and to an appreciable degree a successful extent striven to improve these back ways of the republic's beautiful capital, Tuz STAR hopes for an improvement in the naming of the old and new alleys and the new streets. It is not generally anticipated that the alleys will immediately smell more sweet by reason of the more fragrant names, but it is expected that they will gradually be compelled to live up to the improved and reformed nomenclature. It is an easy matter to leave the offensive names out of the map, but to eradicate them from popular use will be a task of considerable magnitude. It will, however, be a most desirable thing to have them obliterated, for in some cases, besides being undignified they convey a suggestion of squalid degradation that reflects anmerited discredit on the city.
